

Two Goats

Martin Luther reportedly told of two mountain goats who met each other on a narrow ledge just wide enough for one of the animals to pass. On the left was a sheer cliff, and on the right a steep wall. The two were facing each other, and it was impossible to turn or to back up.

How did they solve their dilemma? If they had been people, they would have started butting each other until they plunged into the chasm together. But according to Luther, the goats had more sense than that. One of them lay down on the trail and let the other literally walk over him—and both were safe.

Attitude Makes the Difference

I recently heard of a young man suffering with Down's Syndrome who worked at a checkout in a major supermarket. His job was to pack the bags of the customers as they came through his particular line.

He had, however, grabbed hold of the truth of attitude. He decided to leave a signature on his work. He would do what he did better than anyone else around him.

He began to spend his evenings looking for quotes from books and the Internet, and when he had found a suitable one, he would write it up, photocopy it, then cut each page up so he had hundreds of little slips of paper with the quote of the day written on them. Then for the whole of the next working day he would put his "Thought for the Day" into each bag he packed.

A couple of weeks went by and one day the store manager noticed that one checkout line had three times as many people than the others. She quickly tried to organise more checkout operators and began to direct customers to these new open lines. To her surprise, she met great resistance. "No," people protested, "we want to get our thought for the day."

It didn't take long for that young man to become the store's most valuable employee.

Whatever we do, attitude will make the difference.
